

ONYINYECHI OBIDIRO

These assessments are centered around important qualities observed in an individual who desires to improve their personality and character. During these evaluations, I learned new details about myself which I didn't know existed in me. In addition, the assessments talk about self-awareness and goes on to define it as the ability to understand one's emotions and strengths. Self-awareness is the foundation of emotional intelligence, which is the key to being a successful mentor or leader. To add to an overview of my personality type, I also learned about my behavior in relationships, my interactions with friends and colleagues, as well as my strengths and weaknesses.

First, a key quality I observed during the evaluations is that I am inclined to take risks. I enjoy tasks that makes me convert ideas into things. I realized that I am optimistic about leadership and other roles that makes me lead people unto accomplishing meaningful goals. One of the tasks questioned my ability to continue performing tasks with excitement and joy even if I had all the money in the world. Honestly, it made me realize that I naturally enjoyed achieving things and meeting goals irrespective of the financial benefits that comes with it.

Second, I found that I am intrigued by the learning process. That is, I have a sense of fulfillment whenever I am acquiring new information. This desire to understand things has created a curiosity in me. I find myself teaching and sharing these details with other people whenever I have the opportunity. I derive a sense of fulfillment in doing that.

Furthermore, I found that I am very interested in organizing things. I often engage in projects that require me to arrange stuffs from a chaotic state to an orderly process.

Also, I like to advocate for the minority. I believe in equity and that everyone should be given an opportunity. I derive pleasure and a sense of accomplishment when I speak up on behalf of marginalized people. I feel good when I am showing kindness and empathy to people.

Also, the survey evaluates the different behaviors and personalities observed in people. In that test, I found that I tend to explore new ideas and things that pique my interest. This goes to confirm the fact I stated earlier that I am an inquisitive individual by nature.

Further, I found that I am very much interested in engaging in group activities. This shows that I enjoy interacting with people. It also indicates that I value inter-personal relationships. The personality/behavioral evaluation indicates that I am a protagonist. This is a person who is an inspiring optimist. This person is ready to act and do what they feel is the right thing. I discovered what my motivation is in the workforce.

Furthermore, I realized I really want to be in an environment that supports growth and innovation. As much as financial liberation is important, I also feel the need to be in a place where my voice is heard, and my actions felt.

One of the surveys indicated that I would thrive in the 'Yellow World'. This is meant for people who are looking for flexibility and meaning. I find relevance in working for employers with a strong and ethical record-where individuals unite to engage in projects to deliver ideas, for as long as it takes. I derive pleasure in being part of a busy and creative ecosystem with a strong emphasis on ethics and fairness.

All in all, this assessment reiterates the point I mentioned earlier-community and social good are important to me. I believe it's not just a job, it's a calling.